During the beginning of the COVID-19 pandemic, many people turned to telemedicine for healthcare visits—even individuals on Medicare.<sup>2</sup> Before the pandemic, Medicare beneficiaries could not use the telehealth service unless access to in-person care was limited by location. This changed with the pandemic—during that time, the department of health and human services waived some of its telehealth restrictions for Medicare, making it easier for some individuals to get to their appointments.<sup>2</sup>

The study, led by Jacqueline M. Ferguson, PhD, from the Center for Innovation to Implementation at Veterans Affairs Palo
